QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the Town of Egremont and its officers violated the First Amendment by denying nonvoting taxpayers the opportunity to speak at open town meetings on the same basis as that enjoyed by registered voters.

2. Whether the unbridled discretion vested in the Egremont Town Moderator to determine whether and when nonvoting taxpayers may speak at open town meetings violates the First Amendment.

PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDING

Petitioners in this Court, plaintiffs-appellants below, are Miriam Curnin and Thomas F. Curnin.

Respondents in this Court, defendants-appellees below, are the Town of Egremont, Town Moderator Thomas Gage, and Egremont Selectboard Members Bruce Turner, Thomas Haas and Mary Brazie. Former Selectboard Member Philip Reilly was a defendant below, but Mr. Haas was substituted as a defendant after Mr. Reilly died during the pendency of this action.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

OPINIONS BELOW

The decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit is reported at 510 F.3d 24 and is reprinted in the Appendix hereto at 1a-16a. The United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts did not issue a written opinion when it denied Petitioners' motion for a preliminary injunction, but instead stated that the transcript of the preliminary injunction hearing would act as its memorandum. J.A. 337.[1] The district court also did not issue a written order denying Petitioners' motion for a preliminary injunction, but instead noted such order on the docket sheet. App. 17a-18a.[2]

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the court of appeals was entered on November 29, 2007. The court of appeals denied a timely petition for rehearing en banc on January 9, 2008. App. 19a-20a. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS

The First Amendment to the United States Constitution is reproduced in the Appendix to this petition at 21a.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This case raises fundamental questions about taxpayers' rights to speak freely at local town meetings. Petitioners Miriam and Thomas F. Curnin wish to speak at their local town meetings on the same basis as other town residents but are denied such equal speech rights solely because they are not registered to vote in the town and despite the fact that they own property in the town, pay taxes to the town, and receive essential services from the town.

The Parties

Petitioners are longtime residents of the Town of Egremont, Massachusetts, having first purchased residential property there in 1991. J.A. 61. Although Petitioners are not permanent residents of the Town, they live there for a significant number of months each year. J.A. 62. Petitioners pay taxes to the Town, including approximately $150,000 paid in property taxes from 1991 through 2006. J.A. 61. Petitioners are registered to vote in New York. App. 6a.

There is a sizable population of individuals who share Petitioners' status as residents of the Town of Egremont who are registered to vote elsewhere. From 2001 through 2006, this group collectively paid approximately forty percent (40%) of the Town's property tax revenue. J.A. 76-81.

Respondent Thomas Gage is and was during all relevant times the Town Moderator for the Town of Egremont and represents the Town in that capacity. J.A. 30, 61. As the Town Moderator, a paid elected official, J.A. 30, Gage's specific duties are authorized by Mass. Gen. Laws, Ch. 39, §§ 15, 17 to 18, and include calling town meetings to order, recognizing attendants who want to speak, and calling for votes on matters that are on the town meeting agenda. J.A. 30-32.

Respondents Bruce Turner, Thomas Haas and Mary Brazie are or were during all relevant times Selectmen of the Town of Egremont and represent the Town in that capacity. J.A. 61. As Selectmen in elected positions for which they are paid, J.A. 49, they make suggestions to voters through the issuance and distribution of a warrant. J.A. 90-91.

The Town of Egremont is also a respondent in this action.

The Egremont Town Meeting

The Egremont Town Meeting is the legislative body of the Town of Egremont. App. 5a. Town meetings are where the registered voters of Egremont vote on matters of importance to the community, including by-laws, taxes, zoning, the town budget, and other economic issues. J.A. 53-54, 90. In addition to the annual town meeting, special town meetings dedicated to specific issues are held on an as-needed basis. J.A. 223-24, 240-41.

The Egremont Town Meeting is an open town meeting (as compared to a representative town meeting) whereby all citizens registered to vote in the Town are eligible legislators. App. 5a. As there is no requirement that voters actually attend town meetings, the composition of any given town meeting cannot be determined until the meeting is called to order.

The Egremont Town Meeting is also open to the public; anyone can attend. App. 9a n.3. Registered voters have the right to address the meeting. J.A. 95. If nonvoting taxpayers such as Petitioners wish to speak, they must first obtain the permission of the Town Moderator. App. 5a-6a.

Egremont's policy regarding the speech rights of nonvoters at town meetings is informal and inconsistent. Not only is the policy unwritten (i.e., not contained in any statute, Town by-law, or Town Charter), but it has been applied in an inconsistent fashion over the years. In the past, town moderators routinely allowed nonvoters to speak. J.A. 51, 146. Current Town Moderator and Respondent Thomas Gage, however, does not. Gage generally denies nonvoters the right to speak at town meetings, although his methods for doing so have varied. J.A. 37, 42-43. Sometimes he denies nonvoters the right to speak by executive fiat; at other times, he puts the issue to the voters.

For example, on May 26, 2005, the Town of Egremont held a special town meeting devoted to the proposed construction and financing of a new sewer system that would raise property taxes. J.A. 56. Before the nonvoters in attendance even had the opportunity to voice their desire to speak, Gage called for a vote at the outset of the meeting as to whether nonvoters would be permitted to speak. J.A. 40. The majority of voters in attendance voted to deny nonvoters the right to speak, foreclosing Petitioners and many others like them the opportunity to be heard on this important matter of concern to all taxpayers. J.A. 56, 108.

Gage took a different approach at the May 2, 2006 annual town meeting. On the agenda at this meeting was a proposal to amend zoning laws to limit new commercial space to 10,000 square feet per lot. J.A. 116. When Petitioner Thomas F. Curnin and another man rose to speak, Gage told the other man that he would have to wait until later. J.A. 56. Gage never permitted the other man or Curnin to speak, however, because he recognized a call for a vote on the proposed zoning amendment, therefore concluding all discussion of the matter. J.A. 56.

Lower Court Proceedings

On May 2, 2006, Petitioners filed a complaint in the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts seeking declaratory and injunctive relief under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, claiming that the Town of Egremont's policy of denying nonvoting taxpayers the same opportunity to speak at Town Meetings as that given to voters violated the First Amendment, the Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment, and similar provisions of the Massachusetts Constitution. App. 7a.[3]

[3] The United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts had jurisdiction over the action pursuant to

On April 13, 2007, Petitioners moved for a preliminary injunction seeking to enjoin Respondents from denying them the opportunity to speak at Egremont Town Meetings, and in particular, the then-upcoming May 1, 2007 annual town meeting. J.A. 23-24. On April 25, 2007, a hearing was held on the motion. App. 17a. Believing that Petitioners had not shown a likelihood of success on the merits, the district court denied their motion for a preliminary injunction. J.A. 333.

Petitioners timely appealed the denial of their motion for a preliminary injunction to the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit. On November 29, 2007, the court of appeals issued its decision affirming the district court's decision. App. 3a. The opinion below is striking in its failure to apply any First Amendment scrutiny to Petitioners' claims. Contrary to other courts that have addressed speech restrictions at the local legislative level, the First Circuit held that "[public] forum analysis is inapposite because the town meeting is a legislative body in deliberation." App. 2a. According to the court, because Petitioners are not registered to vote in the Town of Egremont and therefore not town meeting legislators, "[t]he First Amendment does not give [them] the right to speak at meetings of deliberating legislative bodies, regardless of whether they own property or pay taxes." App. 2a. In reaching its conclusion, the court erroneously relied on Minnesota State Board for Community Colleges v. Knight, 465 U.S. 271 (1984), in which this Court addressed speech rights in the context of a representative collective bargaining session, a situation vastly different than the one presented here involving a direct democracy open to the public such as the Egremont Town Meeting.

The court also rejected Petitioners' argument that Respondents violated the First Amendment by placing too much discretion over the speech rights of nonvoting taxpayers in the hands of the Town Moderator. As an initial matter, the court recognized that the Town Moderator exercised "a measure of discretion" with respect to the speech rights of nonvoting taxpayers. App. 16a. However, the court then ignored the First Amendment concerns raised by such discretion by requiring Petitioners to first make an evidentiary showing of viewpoint discrimination. App. 16a. The court's ruling that an evidentiary showing of viewpoint discrimination was required is directly contrary to a long line of authority from this Court and other courts, which holds that it is the mere threat of viewpoint discrimination that makes unbridled discretion in the hands of local officials problematic under the First Amendment. See, e.g., City of Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publishing Company, 486 U.S. 750, 757 (1988) ("[T]he mere existence of the licensor's unfettered discretion, coupled with the power of prior restraint, intimidates parties into censoring their own speech, even if the discretion and power are never actually abused."). As this Court has warned, there will rarely be evidence of viewpoint discrimination because unbridled discretion allows state actors to mask such invidious practices in the first place. See id. at 760 ("[W]ithout standards to bound the licensor, speakers denied a license will have no way of proving that the decision was unconstitutionally motivated . . . ."). Thus the decision below turns the unbridled discretion doctrine on its head.[4]

Relying on the First Circuit's broad ruling affirming the denial of preliminary injunctive relief, on December 10, 2007, the district court denied Petitioners' motion for summary judgment, granted Respondents' cross-motion for summary judgment, and entered judgment for Respondents. App. 24a.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

This case raises important questions about protecting the fundamental right to engage in political speech—speech that "has always rested on the highest rung of the hierarchy of First Amendment values." Carey v. Brown, 447 U.S. 455, 467 (1980). Petitioners are not given the same opportunity to speak at Egremont Town Meetings as that given to locally-registered voters, despite the fact that they own property in the Town, receive essential services from the Town, and contribute to the Town's tax base. Under the Town's policy, Petitioners and other nonvoting taxpayers can be denied the opportunity to speak at town meetings for no reason or any reason on the whim of the Town Moderator. The court of appeals sanctioned this regime without subjecting the Town's policy to any First Amendment scrutiny, thereby effectively creating a First [4] The court of appeals also rejected Petitioners' equal protection and due process claims. App. 15a n.5.

Amendment-free zone around New England town meetings. If the opinion below is allowed to stand, the First Amendment rights of Petitioners and many others like them to engage in political speech regarding the affairs of their community will continue to be suppressed in a large part of the country utilizing the town meeting form of local government.

Review is also warranted because the decision below conflicts with decisions of this Court and the Fourth, Fifth, Ninth and Tenth Circuit Courts of Appeals holding that unbridled discretion over speech rights in the hands of state actors raises First Amendment concerns. The decision below also ignored this Court's opinion in City of Madison, Joint School District No. 8 v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission, establishing that "the participation in public discussion of public business cannot be confined to one category of interested individuals." 429 U.S. 167, 175 (1976). Finally, the decision below conflicts with decisions of the United States Courts of Appeals for the Ninth and Tenth Circuits, which have applied public forum analysis to similar speech restrictions at municipal-level legislative meetings. These conflicts regarding the doctrinal framework for analyzing speech restrictions on political speech at the local government level warrant this Court's attention.

I. This Proceeding Involves a Question of Exceptional Constitutional Importance: Whether the First Amendment Applies Vel Non to Open Town Meetings.

The speech in which Petitioners wish to engage involves the public affairs of the town where they reside, own property, pay taxes, and from which they receive essential services. Speech relating to such issues, i.e., political speech, is at the core of First Amendment protection. As this Court has stated:

> Whatever differences may exist about interpretations of the First Amendment, there is practically universal agreement that a major purpose of that Amendment was to protect the free discussion of governmental affairs. This of course includes discussion of candidates, structures and forms of government, the manner in which government is operated or should be operated, and all such matters relating to political processes. Mills v. Alabama, 384 U.S. 214, 218-19 (1966).

While the decision below recognized that Petitioners "have a legitimate interest in attempting to influence the policy choices made by the town of Egremont," App. 14a, it failed to recognize the importance of the political speech at issue and the high level of protection that such speech is accorded. This fundamental error by the lower court led it to eschew any First Amendment analysis of the speech restriction at issue. Rather than requiring Respondents to justify their speech restriction and then analyzing any justification under a constitutional framework, the lower court broadly held that Respondents were immune from a First Amendment challenge.

The decision below has wide implications. It effectively closes the courthouse door to a First Amendment challenge involving any similar speech restriction at the local town meeting level of government, which is used throughout New England. See, e.g., App. 3a ("[T]own meetings continue to exist in New England as a town's legislative arm and are responsible for the traditional legislative functions of making laws and controlling spending."); Massachusetts Moderators Association, Town Meeting Time: A Handbook of Parliamentary Law 1 (3d ed. 2001) ("The basic unit of local government in New England is the town. . . . The distinctive characteristic of town government . . . is the town meeting . . . in which are vested the traditional powers of the legislative branch of any level of government the power to make laws . . . and the power of the purse."); Robert J. Tilden, Town Government, 38 B.U. L. Rev. 347, 348 (1958) ("[T]his venerable form of local government affects the daily lives and pocketbooks of more people than at any time in history."); J.A. 254 (Citizen Information Service, Citizen's Guide to Town Meetings, http://www.sec.state.ma.us/cis/cistwn/twnidx.htm (last visited Apr. 4, 2008) ("Most but not all [Massachusetts] towns have Town Meetings.")).

Under the decision below, a significant number of people who have a direct interest in the public affairs of their town can be denied the opportunity to engage in political speech simply because they have chosen to vote elsewhere. Such widespread suppression of political speech threatens the communication of ideas essential to a deliberative democracy such as ours. See, e.g., Cox v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 536, 552 (1965) ("Maintenance of the opportunity for free political discussion is a basic tenet of our constitutional democracy."). Cf. New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 270 (1964) (recognizing "a profound national commitment to the principle that debate on public issues should be uninhibited, robust, and wide-open, and that it may well include vehement, caustic and sometimes unpleasantly sharp attacks on government and public officials").

Considering the importance of the speech at issue here and that such speech has historically been provided a generous amount of First Amendment protection, the petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

II. By Requiring Evidence of Viewpoint Discrimination as a Precondition to Addressing Petitioners' Unbridled Discretion Argument, the Decision Below Conflicts with Decisions of this Court and Other Courts of Appeals.

It is undisputed that the Town Moderator exercises wide discretion in determining whether to allow nonvoting taxpayers such as Petitioners to speak at Egremont Town Meetings. There is no statute, by-law, or policy (whether written or unwritten) to guide the moderator's discretion. The current Town Moderator admitted that whether he permits nonvoting taxpayers to speak at town meetings "depends on the situation" or "the issue." J.A. 34. The problem with placing such unbridled discretion in the hands of the Town Moderator is that he can make his decisions based upon the views he expects the non-voting taxpayer to express—and no one would really know that he is doing so.

The court below recognized the wide discretion enjoyed by the Town Moderator, App. 16a, but erroneously swept aside the serious First Amendment concerns implicated by this standardless scheme. In rejecting Petitioners' unbridled discretion argument, the court of appeals ruled that there was "no evidence" that the Town Moderator had used such discretion to engage in viewpoint discrimination. App. 16a. By requiring an evidentiary showing of viewpoint discrimination, however, the First Circuit missed the whole point of the unbridled discretion doctrine. A long line of authority from this Court holds that it is the mere threat of viewpoint discrimination that makes unbridled discretion in the hands of a local official unconstitutional, not actual evidence of viewpoint discrimination, which is often difficult if not impossible to show in these circumstances. For example, in Forsyth County, Georgia v. The Nationalist Movement, 505 U.S. 123, 133 n.10 (1992), this Court stated that "the success of a facial challenge on the grounds that an ordinance delegates overly broad discretion to the decisionmaker rests not on whether the administrator has exercised his discretion in a content-based manner, but whether there is anything in the ordinance preventing him from doing so." This is because "without standards to bound the licensor, speakers denied a license will have no way of proving that the decision was uncon-stitutionally motivated, and, faced with that prospect, they will be pressured to conform their speech to the licensor's unreviewable preference." City of Lakewood, 486 at 760. See also id. at 757 ("[T]he mere existence of the licensor's unfettered discretion, coupled with the power of prior restraint, intimidates parties into censoring their own speech, even if the discretion and power are never actually abused."); Niemotko v. State of Maryland, 340 U.S. 268, 285 (1951) ("The vice to be guarded against is arbitrary action by officials. The fact that in a particular instance an action appears not arbitrary does not save the validity of the authority under which the action was taken."); Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 97 (1940) ("It is not merely the sporadic abuse of power by the censor but the pervasive threat inherent in its very existence that constitutes the danger to freedom of discussion.").

The opinion below also conflicts with decisions of the Fourth, Fifth, Ninth and Tenth Circuits, which faithfully adhere to this Court's authority on this issue. 1126 Baltimore Boulevard, Inc. v. Prince George's County, Maryland, 58 F.3d 988, 994 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1010 (1995) ("Without the constraint of specific standards to guide the decisionmaker . . . an impermissible danger exists that a government official may decide to exercise his judgment to suppress speech he personally finds distasteful or that an applicant may feel compelled to censor his own speech."); Beckerman v. City of Tupelo, Mississippi, 664 F.2d 502, 506-07 (5th Cir. 1981) ("In the case of a licensing statute containing allegedly excessive discretion, facial challenges are permitted because the mere existence of such discretion is unconstitutional. . . . Appellants need not argue that there has been an abuse of discretion as a prerequisite to a facial attack."); Gaudiya Vaishnava Society v. City and County of San Francisco, 952 F.2d 1059, 1066 (9th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 504 U.S. 914 (1992) ("Such discretion grants officials the power to discriminate and raises the spectre of selective enforcement on the basis of content of speech.") (internal quotation and citation omitted); Association for Community Organizations for Reform Now v. Municipality of Golden, Colorado, 744 F.2d 739, 747 (10th Cir. 1984) ("Vesting . . . authority with this discretion permits the government to control the viewpoints that will be expressed. Whether the city council or the police exercises this power" is irrelevant.).

That these cases usually arise in the licensing context does not foreclose Petitioners' unbridled discretion argument, as the court below erroneously thought. See App. 16a. As an initial matter, the Town Moderator's role regarding speech rights is no different than other local officials in the licensing arena. The Town Moderator decides on the spot who does and who does not get to speak. If anything, that the unbridled discretion exists to chill political speech at a town meeting weighs in favor, not against, the doctrine's application here. Moreover, other courts have applied First Amendment unbridled discretion analysis outside the licensing context. See, e.g., United States v. Crowthers, 456 F.2d 1074, 1080 (4th Cir. 1972) (applying unbridled discretion analysis to a disorderly conduct regulation); Long Island Vietnam Moratorium Committee v. Cahn, 437 F.2d 344, 350 (2d Cir. 1970), aff'd, 418 U.S. 906 (1974) (applying unbridled discretion analysis to a statute that made it a misdemeanor to display any word, figure, mark, picture, design, drawing or advertisement upon any flag, standard, color, shield, or ensign of the United States or the State of New York).

Considering the conflict created by the First Circuit's adoption of a requirement that an affirmative showing of viewpoint discrimination is necessary to challenge a state actor's unbounded discretion to suppress speech about public affairs, the petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

III. In Declining to Engage in a Public Forum Analysis, the Decision Below Conflicts with this Court's Decision in City of Madison and Authoritative Rulings in the Ninth and Tenth Circuit Courts of Appeals.

In broad and sweeping terms, the First Circuit declined to apply any public forum analysis to the speech restriction at issue. Instead, the court accepted Respondents' argument that, because the Egremont Town Meeting is a legislative body and Petitioners are not legislators, they have no First Amendment rights when it comes to the town meeting. App. 11a. Accordingly, the court "reject[ed] forum analysis entirely as an inappropriate model to apply to deliberations of a town legislative body." App. 10a (footnote omitted). In doing so, the First Circuit ignored this Court's decision in City of Madison.

In City of Madison, this Court made clear that "the participation in public discussion of public business cannot be confined to any category of interested individuals." 429 U.S. at 175. At issue was whether a public school teacher who was not a union representative could address school board meetings regarding pending collective bargaining negotiations despite a Wisconsin law forbidding the school teacher from doing so. Id. at 169. Finding that the teacher had a right to address the school board meeting, this Court stated that "[t]o permit one side of a debatable public question to have a monopoly in expressing its views to the government is the antithesis of constitutional guarantees." Id. at 175-76. According to this Court, "[w]here the State has opened a forum for direct citizen involvement, it [was] difficult to find justification for excluding teachers who ma[d]e up the overwhelming proportion of school employees and who [were] most vitally concerned with the proceedings." Id. at 175. Therefore, "[w]hatever its duties as an employer, when the board sits in public meetings to conduct public business and hear the views of citizens, it [could] not be required to discriminate between speakers on the basis of their employment, or the content of their speech." Id. at 176.

Here, Petitioners are similar to the public school teachers in City of Madison. The Egremont Town Meeting is a "forum for direct citizen involvement" to which the public is invited to attend. Furthermore, as an open town meeting whose composition cannot be determined until the meeting is called to order, it is the only adequate venue for Petitioners and others like them to communicate their views regarding local affairs. Unlike a representative legislature, there are no elected officials for Petitioners to lobby. There is no justification for denying nonvoting taxpayers the same opportunity to speak at town meetings as that given to other Town residents when they too are vitally concerned with the proceedings and connected to the community.

The First Circuit mistakenly looked to this Court's opinion in Minnesota State Board for Community Colleges v. Knight, 465 U.S. 271 (1984), to support its view that forum analysis is inapposite here. App. 11a-12a. At issue in Knight was a state law restricting the right of public employers to "meet and confer" about non-mandatory bargaining subjects with only the exclusive representatives of their employees' bargaining unit. Id. at 274-75. According to this Court, the case was about a supposed "constitutional right of faculty to participate in policy-making in academic institutions." Id. at 287. At issue here, however, is the fundamental right of every American citizen to engage in political speech regarding the affairs of his or her community. Thus the issues confronted in Knight involving teachers and collective bargaining are vastly different on the constitutional scale than those here. Furthermore, in Knight, this Court distinguished City of Madison. As explained by the Court, because Knight "involve[d] no selective closure of a generally open forum . . . any reliance on the City of Madison case would [have been] misplaced." Id. at 281. That is not the case here. Here, as in City of Madison, there is a selective closure (to nonvoting taxpayers) of a generally open forum (the Egremont Town Meeting).

The decision below also conflicts with authoritative decisions of the United States Courts of Appeals for the Ninth and Tenth Circuits that applied public forum analysis in the context of local legislative meetings. In Kindt v. Santa Monica Rent Control Board, 67 F.3d 266, 270 (9th Cir. 1995), the Ninth Circuit held that public forum analysis should be applied in evaluating discriminatory restrictions on speech in the context of a rent control board meeting and found the meeting to be a nonpublic forum. And in Mesa v. White, 197 F.3d 1041, 1044 (10th Cir. 1999), the Tenth Circuit likewise concluded that public forum analysis should be applied in evaluating discriminatory restrictions on speech in the context of a county commission meeting and found the meeting to be a designated public forum.

In contrast to these decisions, the First Circuit rejected public forum analysis out of hand. The court below attempted to distinguish cases like Kindt and Mesa by noting that they "involve[d] municipal-level public meetings that allowed members of the public to speak during designated portions of the meetings but shut out certain speakers during those portions." App. 12a. The First Circuit failed to recognize that the municipal meetings at issue in those decisions involved representative legislatures, not a form of direct democracy such as the Egremont Town Meeting. This distinction is critical. As an open town meeting, the Egremont Town Meeting does not need to have a "formal" public comment period that is typical in representative bodies, such as those at issue in Kindt and Mesa. In an open town meeting, comments are permitted throughout the duration of the meeting regarding the matters set forth in the warrant and subject to the Town Moderator's duty to maintain order. See J.A. 262 (Citizen Information Service, Citizen's Guide to Town Meetings, http://www.sec.state.ma.us/cis/cistwn/twnidx.htm (last visited Apr. 4, 2008) ("If you wish to speak, stand up and wait for the moderator to acknowledge you.")). The decision below leads to an incongruous conflict among United States Courts of Appeals: discriminatory restrictions on speech in the context of local legislative meetings are generally subject to a public forum analysis, but not in the First Circuit, where ironically town meetings are open to the public "and often considered an exemplar of pure democracy." App. 3a.

In light of the conflict created by the First Circuit's refusal to apply a public forum (or any other First Amendment) analysis to the speech restriction at issue, the petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

CONCLUSION

The petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIRST CIRCUIT

No. 07-1876
Heard Nov. 7, 2007
Decided Nov. 29, 2007

MIRIAM CURNIN; THOMAS F. CURNIN,

Plaintiffs-Appellants,

—v.—

TOWN OF EGREMONT; THOMAS GAGE, Town Moderator; BRUCE TURNER, Board of Selectmen; PHILIP REILLY, Board of Selectmen; MARY BRAZIE, Board of Selectmen, Defendants-Appellees.

Landis C. Best with whom Judith C. Knight, Joseph H. Zwicker, Choate Hall & Stewart LLP, Nicholas Boski, and Cahill Gordon & Reindel LLP were on brief for appellants.

Nancy Frankel Pelletier with whom David S. Lawless and Robinson Donovan, P.C. were on brief for appellees.

Before LYNCH, Circuit Judge, CAMPBELL and SELYA, Senior Circuit Judges.

LYNCH, Circuit Judge.

This case raises First Amendment questions about limiting the participation of non-voters at a New England town meeting.

Miriam and Thomas Curnin, who own property but are not registered to vote in the town of Egremont, Massachusetts, appeal from the district court's refusal to grant a preliminary injunction mandating that they be permitted to speak at Egremont's town meeting. The Curnins contend that the town meeting is a designated public forum and Egremont's policy of permitting non-voters like themselves, who own property and pay taxes but are not town meeting members, to speak only at the discretion of the town meeting and its moderator violates their First Amendment rights.

We hold that forum analysis is inapposite because the town meeting is a legislative body in deliberation. The Curnins are not registered to vote in Egremont and therefore are not town meeting legislators. The First Amendment does not give non-legislators the right to speak at meetings of deliberating legislative bodies, regardless of whether they own property or pay taxes.

We also reject the Curnins' arguments that Egremont has engaged in viewpoint discrimination and that the First Amendment is violated by the discretion vested in the town meeting moderator to recognize speakers, including individuals not members of the town meeting. We affirm the district court's denial of a preliminary injunction.

I.

The New England town meeting is a special form of government dating back to the colonial era and often considered an exemplar of pure democracy. See R. Tilden, Town Government, 38 B.U. L.Rev. 347, 348 (1958).

Town meetings in colonial times were charged with administrative and judicial as well as legislative duties. R. Johnson et al., Town Meeting Time: A Handbook of Parliamentary Law 4 (3d ed. 2001). Membership in town meetings was limited to those who belonged to the established church and owned the requisite amount of property. Tilden, supra, at 356. Attendance was compulsory, and those who arrived late were punished with a fine. Johnson et al., supra, at 3.

Other forms of government have emerged to carry out local administrative and judicial functions since the colonial era. Id. at 4. But town meetings continue to exist in New England as a town's legislative arm and are responsible for the traditional legislative functions of making laws and controlling spending. Id. One commentator notes that a town meeting's "votes in municipal government correspond to those of the General Court [state legislature] in the state government and of the Congress in the national government."[1] Tilden, supra, at 349.

In towns using a representative town meeting, registered voters who are not town meeting members can speak "subject to conditions prescribed by the meeting." Sec'y of the Commonwealth, Citizen Info. Serv., Citizen's Guide to Town Meetings, available at http://www.sec.state.ma.us/cis/cistwn/twnidx.htm.

Massachusetts law requires that, unless otherwise provided, each town must hold an annual town meeting in February, March, April, or May. Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 39, § 9. Special town meetings are called if a question arises requiring legislative action before the next annual meeting. At least seven days before annual town meetings and at least fourteen days before special town meetings, a town's selectmen must issue a warrant setting forth the time and location of the meeting and the subjects to be addressed. Id. § 10. Each town sets its own quorum for town meeting business. Id. § 13. A moderator elected by the town's voters is responsible for [1] That correspondence admits of one distinction. The town meeting may embody either direct democracy or representative democracy; the other two embody representative democracy. In the early twentieth century, some towns started to find open town meetings "unwieldy and often unrepresentative of a cross-section of the town population" and therefore replaced them with representative town meetings. Johnson et al., supra, at 6. In a town with a representative meeting, only elected town meeting members can vote at town meeting, although all registered voters may attend. Id. at 7. Today, a town with a population over 6,000 may establish a representative town meeting. Mass. Const. art. LXXXIX.

"presid[ing] and regulat[ing] the proceedings" and "decid[ing] all questions of order." Id. §§ 14, 15. All of a town's registered voters can speak and vote at town meeting, unlike the colonial requirements tying town meeting participation to property ownership and church membership. Id. § 18; Sec'y of the Commonwealth, Citizen Info. Serv., Citizen's Guide to Town Meetings, available at http://www.sec.state.ma.us/cis/cistwn/twnidx.htm [hereinafter Citizen's Guide]. Non-voters can attend and can speak "at the discretion of the moderator or Town Meeting." Citizen's Guide, supra.

Egremont is a small town in western Massachusetts that employs an open town meeting, not a representative town meeting, as its legislative body. As of 2006, it had a population of 1032, with 875 registered voters.

Egremont's bylaws supplement the state requirements by providing that all warrants be posted in at least four public places within the town at least fourteen days before the town meeting is scheduled to occur; if a special town meeting is called, the selectmen must place a synopsis of the warrant in the local newspaper at least fourteen days before the meeting. Sixty voters must be present at town meeting in order for a quorum to exist.

Egremont's current moderator, Thomas Gage, has adopted a policy of separating voters from non-voters by giving voters colored placards. (Under a previous moderator, non-voters were seated in a separate section of the room.) Unless constrained by a contrary vote of the town meeting members, the moderator has the discretion to determine whether non-voters who wish to speak may do so. The moderator follows the rules of order set forth in Town Meeting Time. For example, if there is an appropriate motion to call the vote, there is no further discussion before the vote. Thus, even the right of town meeting members to speak is qualified.

The Curnins own a house and pay taxes on it and approximately 120 acres of land in Egremont, but they are not registered to vote there. They also have a residence in Larchmont, New York, where they are registered to vote.

The Curnins point to three specific town meetings at which they assert they were prevented from speaking on issues important to them as taxpayers. At the beginning of a special town meeting to consider a proposed sewer project on May 26, 2005, a motion was made to allow non-voters to speak. This motion failed by a vote of 100 to 67. The sewer proposal was defeated, in a quick succession of motions, without any discussion or debate by either voters or non-voters.

At the annual town meeting on May 2, 2006, Thomas Curnin and another non-voter rose to speak on a proposal to amend the town's zoning laws to limit new commercial space to 10,000 square feet. Moderator Gage told the other non-voter who wished to speak to wait and that he would be considered later. At that point, town meeting members called for a vote on the zoning law amendment; there were no further comments from either voters or non-voters.

At a special town meeting on June 21, 2006, voters considered whether to spend $350,000 on a new fire truck for the town. Curnin asserts that he wanted to speak about the propriety of the bid the town received for the truck, although he does not seem to have made his desire to speak known. Moderator Gage called for a vote regarding the purchase of the truck after asking two voters who were about to leave to delay their exit because a quorum would not exist without them.

On May 2, 2006, the Curnins sought declaratory and injunctive relief in federal district court under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, claiming that Egremont's policy of not permitting non-voters who own property and pay taxes to speak at town meetings violates their rights under the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution and similar provisions of the Massachusetts Constitution.[2]

On April 13, 2007, the Curnins filed a motion for a preliminary injunction to force Egremont to permit them to speak at its annual town meeting on May 1, 2007. The district court denied the injunction in an oral opinion issued on April 25, 2007. The district court emphasized that it did not "see how the ownership of property and the payment of taxes gives someone who is a non-voting member of the town a status equal to voting members when it comes to speaking at town meetings." The district court also expressed skepticism about the Curnins' arguments that Egremont engages in viewpoint discrimination by allowing voters but not non-voters to speak and that the discretion in the moderator to decide when a non-voter can speak creates a First Amendment violation. This timely appeal followed.

Although the May 2007 town meeting has now passed, Egremont's policy has not changed, nor has the Curnins' desire to speak at future town meetings.

II.

We review the denial of a preliminary injunction for abuse of discretion. Rivera-Feliciano v. Acevedo-Vila, 438 F.3d 50, 63 (1st Cir.2006). There are no questions of fact in dispute, so the only issues are ones of law.

The district court correctly considered four factors in determining whether to issue a preliminary injunction: "(1) the likelihood of success on the merits; (2) the potential for irreparable harm if the injunction is denied; (3) the balance of relevant impositions, i.e., the hardship to the nonmovant if enjoined as contrasted with the hardship to the movant if no injunction issues; and (4) the effect (if any) of the court's ruling on the public interest." Bl(a)ck Tea Soc'y v. City of Boston, 378 F.3d 8, 11 (1st Cir.2004) (quoting Charlesbank Equity Fund II v. Blinds To Go, Inc., 370 F.3d 151, 162 (1st Cir.2004)) (internal quotation marks omitted).

We turn to whether the Curnins have demonstrated a probability of success on their First Amendment claims. We engage in de novo review in First Amendment cases of the district court's conclusions of law and mixed questions of law and fact. Hurley v. Irish-Am. Gay, Lesbian & Bisexual Group of Boston, 515 U.S. 557, 567, 115 S.Ct. 2338, 132 L.Ed.2d 487 (1995).

The Curnins argue that the district court erred by not analyzing Egremont's town meeting using the methodology of forum analysis. Forum analysis primarily concerns the use of government property for speech, and the extent to which government can restrict speech turns on the category to which property is assigned. E. Chemerinsky, Constitutional Law 1126-27 (3d ed.2006). The Supreme Court has distinguished several types of forums, including traditional public forums, designated public forums, and non-public forums. Ridley v. Mass. Bay Transp. Auth., 390 F.3d 65, 76 (1st Cir.2004). This circuit has used the phrase "limited public forums" to describe non-public forums, id. at 76 n. 4, and we adhere to that usage here.

The Curnins first argue that Egremont's town meeting qualifies as a designated public forum for two reasons. First, they argue that Egremont's town meetings must be public forums because they are open to the public,[3] take place on government property, and involve important matters of public interest. Second, they argue by analogy that other courts have held that municipal-level public meetings are designated public forums and therefore town meetings are as well. They further argue that even if the town meeting is not considered a designated public forum but only a limited public forum, Egremont's policy cannot satisfy the corresponding level of scrutiny.

[3] The Curnins are incorrect in their subsidiary assertion that Massachusetts's open meeting requirement applies to town meetings. It is true that state law provides that "[a]ll meetings of a governmental body shall be open to the public and any person shall be permitted to attend any meeting," Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 39, § 23B, but town meetings are specifically excluded from the definition of governmental bodies, id. § 23A (providing in the definition of "governmental body" that "this definition shall not include a town meeting"). However, the Curnins are correct in that town meetings are open to the public. Citizen's Guide, supra.

The Curnins make a second and separate series of First Amendment arguments under the rubric of viewpoint-related discrimination. They assert that the categorical preclusion of those who are not town meeting members from the right to speak is a form of viewpoint discrimination. They also argue that Egremont's policy of letting non-voters speak only at the discretion of the moderator is unconstitutional. They further argue that this discretion raises the prospect of possible viewpoint discrimination by the moderator in his decision to recognize certain people and not others.

The Curnins' first group of arguments, based on forum analysis, is incorrect under First Amendment doctrine. Forum analysis of any sort is inapposite in the context of complaints about the deliberations of a legislative body, as Egremont's town meeting is. We reject forum analysis entirely as an inappropriate model to apply to the deliberations of a town legislative body.[4] The

[4] Even were we to apply the forum analysis model, we would hold, similar to the Supreme Court's analysis in United States v. Am. Library Ass'n, 539 U.S. 194, 123 S.Ct. 2297, 156 L.Ed.2d 221 (2003), that "the public forum prinregistered voters who speak and vote at Egremont's town meeting do so in their capacity as legislators. Since they are not registered voters, the Curnins are not legislators. Non-legislators have no First Amendment right to address sessions of deliberating legislative bodies.

The Supreme Court has never extended First Amendment forum analysis to a deliberating legislative body or to the body's rules about who may speak. While no Supreme Court case is directly on point, the Court has addressed the underlying issue of the public's ability to address government policymakers:

> The Constitution does not grant to members of the public generally a right to be heard by public bodies making decisions of policy. . . . Policymaking organs in our system of government have never operated under a constitutional constraint requiring them to afford every interested member of the public an opportunity to present testimony before any policy is adopted. . . . Public officials at all levels of government daily make policy decisions based only on the advice they decide they need and choose to hear. To recognize a constitutional right to participate directly in government policymaking would work a revolution in existing government practices.

ciples on which [plaintiffs rely] are out of place in the context of this case. [Town meetings are] neither a traditional nor a designated public forum." Id. at 205, 123 S.Ct. 2297.

(1984). In Knight, the Court rejected First Amendment claims by plaintiffs that they had a right to force officers of the state, acting in an official capacity, to listen to them in a particular formal setting. Id. at 283, 104 S.Ct. 1058.

The Curnins' next forum-related argument, which proceeds by analogy, fails because the cases they cite involve municipal-level public meetings that allowed members of the public to speak during designated portions of the meetings but shut out certain speakers during those portions. See Mesa v. White, 197 F.3d 1041, 1043 (10th Cir.1999) (former county commissioner prevented from speaking during public comment period of county commission meeting); Piscottano v. Town of Somers, 396 F.Supp.2d 187, 193-94 (D.Conn.2005) (resident concerned about town official's behavior prevented from speaking during public comment portion of Board of Selectmen meeting); Scroggins v. City of Topeka, 2 F.Supp.2d 1362, 1365-66 (D.Kan.1998) (resident cut off while attempting to criticize mayoral appointment during public comment portion of city council meeting); Pesek v. City of Brunswick, 794 F.Supp. 768, 774 (N.D.Ohio 1992) (resident prevented from speaking during public comment portion of city council meeting on grounds that he was also a town employee). The Curnins have not identified any comparable public comment period at Egremont's town meeting.

More generally, the fact that the town meeting is a deliberating legislative body implicates the principle that courts are reluctant to interfere with the rules and procedures adopted by legislatures. Under the Speech or Debate Clause of the U.S. Constitution, Article I, section 6, there are constitutional separation of powers protections for Congress. See, e.g., Eastland v. U.S Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 502, 95 S.Ct. 1813, 44 L.Ed.2d 324 (1975) ("The purpose of the Clause is to insure that the legislative function the Constitution allocates to Congress may be performed independently."); Gravel v. United States, 408 U.S. 606, 616, 92 S.Ct. 2614, 33 L.Ed.2d 583 (1972); see also L. Tribe, American Constitutional Law 370 (2d ed.1988). This immunity extends to injunctive relief. Eastland, 421 U.S. at 503, 95 S.Ct. 1813. No explicit federal constitutional protections cover state or local legislative bodies. However, there are still federalism and separation of powers concerns, which have led to the adoption of similar immunities for state legislators. See Knight, 465 U.S. at 285, 104 S.Ct. 1058; Nat'l Ass'n of Soc. Workers v. Harwood, 69 F.3d 622, 629 (1st Cir.1995) (citing Supreme Court of Va. v. Consumers Union of the U.S., Inc., 446 U.S. 719, 732-33, 100 S.Ct. 1967, 64 L.Ed.2d 641 (1980)).

Regardless of whether it could be of constitutional dimension, no concern is raised in this case of plaintiffs having been excluded from any meaningful opportunity to make their views known to the voters. The Curnins concede there are alternative ways to make their views known, but argue that the most effective method of influencing votes is speaking at town meeting. They argue that because there is no guarantee which registered voters will attend a particular town meeting, they cannot influence the town meeting because they cannot be certain that the voters they lobby will ultimately attend. Still, however, there are a wide variety of ways to lobby town meeting members who are likely to attend outside the meeting itself, and uncertainty as to individual attendance is a problem shared with legislators at any level of government, including Congress.

The Curnins have a number of other means of influencing local decisionmaking, both formal and informal, available to them. All members of the public can speak at meetings of Egremont's Board of Selectmen, and Thomas Curnin has in fact spoken at such meetings in the past. The selectmen play a significant role in town governance in general as well as in town meetings in particular: they issue the warrants that determine town meeting agendas and make recommendations to town meeting regarding each item in the town's budget. The Curnins are also free to attend and speak at the public forums that are held in Egremont from time to time for discussion of important issues. For instance, such public forums were held on the proposed sewer system prior to the town meeting at which it was discussed. Additionally, the Curnins have less formal means of influence available to them, including writing letters to the editor of the local newspaper, taking out advertisements in the local newspaper, and sending mailings to voters.

There is no doubt the Curnins have a legitimate interest in attempting to influence the policy choices made by the town of Egremont. That does not create a right to speak before a legislative body. Our analysis does not change, as the Curnins contend, because Egremont's town meeting embodies direct rather than representative democracy; members of the town meeting are still legislators.

We turn to the viewpoint discrimination argument, which has several levels. The Curnins first argue that Egremont engages in viewpoint discrimination by granting different speaking rights to voters and non-voters. This claim fails. The distinction between those who are and are not town meeting members is not based on viewpoint at all. In fact, the distinction between giving qualified speaking rights to legislators, but not to non-legislators, is entirely rational. The legislative body has limited time to get its work done. Indeed, the distinction made is entirely content-neutral.[5] In their second level of potential discrimination claims based on viewpoint, the Curnins argue that the moderator has an impermissible amount of discretion, in violation of the First Amendment. They rely on an analogy to the licensing context, where the Supreme Court has struck down schemes giving public officials excessive discretion in making decisions such as when to issue permits for demonstrations and parades. See, e.g., City of Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publ'g Co., 486 U.S. 750, 772, 108 S.Ct. 2138, 100 L.Ed.2d 771 (1988) (striking down scheme giving mayor complete discretion in deciding whether to issue permits for newspaper

---

[5] The equal protection claim asserted by the Curnins adds nothing to their case. This case also does not involve restrictions based on the subject matter or nature of speech in a public forum. Cf. Carey v. Brown, 447 U.S. 455, 459-61, 100 S.Ct. 2286, 65 L.Ed.2d 263 (1980). Likewise, their due process claim is futile.

dispensing machines on public property). These cases are different in kind. They do not involve speech before deliberating legislative bodies.

In such bodies, some measure of discretion is inherent in the role of the moderator. The moderator is charged with facilitating an efficient and orderly town meeting. As the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court put it: "A moderator must make judgments on the spot. He must deal with disputants without the protective formality of a judicial proceeding, and he must contend with voters who are not necessarily experienced in the law or conversant with town meeting procedures." MacKeen v. Town of Canton, 379 Mass. 514, 399 N.E.2d 22, 24 (1980).

To the extent the Curnins suggest that the moderator's discretion could enable him to engage in viewpoint discrimination, there is no evidence of any such behavior here. No evidence has been presented to suggest that Egremont is attempting to "give one side of a debatable public question an advantage in expressing its views," First Nat'l Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765, 785, 98 S.Ct. 1407, 55 L.Ed.2d 707 (1978). We need not consider whether there is any cognizable constitutional claim raised if a moderator of a legislative body were to allow non-voters to speak for a limited period but then call on speakers representing only one side of an issue. Nor is there any evidence that the government was preferring only the views of the present administration of the town. The facts raise neither claim.

The judgment of the district court denying preliminary injunctive relief is affirmed.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER
REGARDING PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND
DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO STRIKE AND MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT
(Dkt. Nos. 62, 70, 71)

PONSOR, D.J.

Plaintiffs, property owners in the Town of Egremont, Massachusetts, have brought this lawsuit, contending that Egremont's town meeting is a public forum and that Egremont's policy of permitting non-voters like themselves to speak only at the discretion of the town meeting moderator violates their First Amendment rights. Alternatively, they argue that the limitation on their right to speak constitutes forbidden viewpoint discrimination.

On April 13, 2007, Plaintiffs filed a Motion for Preliminary Injunction. The court denied this motion orally on April 26, 2007, finding that Plaintiffs had not demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits.

Plaintiffs appealed, and on November 29, 2007 the Court of Appeals issued its opinion affirming this court's ruling. Although the First Circuit's review was titularly limited to the district court's ruling on the Motion for Preliminary Injunction, the language of Judge Lynch's opinion made the court's rejection of Plaintiffs' theory of recovery very clear.[1]

The first page of the opinion noted that Egremont's town meeting is a legislative body and that Plaintiffs are not town meeting legislators. The court then held that "[t]he First Amendment does not give non-legislators the right to speak at meetings of deliberating legislative bodies, regardless whether they own property or pay taxes." Curnin v. Town of Tremont, No. 07-1876 (1st Cir. Nov. 29, 2007), slip op. at 2.

[1] In addition to rejecting the constitutional basis for Plaintiffs' First Amendment claim, the First Circuit rejected Plaintiffs' equal protection and due process claims. Curnin v. Town of Egremont, No. 07-1876 (1st Cir. Nov. 29, 2007). slip op. at 15 n.5.

The import of the First Circuit's opinion affirming denial of the Motion for Preliminary Injunction is that Plaintiffs' claims have no constitutional force, and that Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment must be allowed. For this reason, the court hereby DENIES Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment (Dkt. No. 62) and ALLOWS Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment (Dkt. No. 71). The clerk is ordered to enter judgment for Defendants. This case may now be closed.[2]

It is So Ordered.

[2] The court has by marginal notation denied Defendants' Motion to Strike (Dkt. No. 70), as moot. It is true that (with the greatest respect for Prof. Fowler) it is highly unlikely that the court would have permitted plaintiff's expert to testify, had this case gone to trial. Nevertheless, even considering all the evidence Defendants seek to strike, the court would still allow Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment.
